An experiment

1 Some people can't stop looking at their phones even when they're walking on a busy road. As an experiment a city has put a white line so

5 that people who are texting or talking on their phones have their own part of the road.

“People on their phones always walk into other people on the road. They don't look where they are going. We have to help children and older people on the roads,” said Michael Rayner, who did the experiment.

15 Some people don't think it is a good idea. Irene Sands lives near the road. She said, “I think it's silly. When people write text messages, they don't look where they are walking. Then they don't see which part they are walking on.”

Read the text. Then tick ✓ the right box.
